PAPER 124 — THE LATER CHILDHOOD OF JESUS

124:0.1 Although Jesus might have enjoyed a better opportunity for schooling at Alexandria than in Galilee, he could not have had such a splendid environment for working out his own life problems with a minimum of educational guidance, at the same time enjoying the great advantage of constantly contacting with such a large number of all classes of men and women hailing from every part of the civilized world. Had he remained at Alexandria, his education would have been directed by Jews and along exclusively Jewish lines. At Nazareth he secured an education and received a training which more acceptably prepared him to understand the gentiles, and which gave him a better and more balanced idea of the relative merits of the Eastern, or Babylonian, and the Western, or Hellenic, views of Hebrew theology.

1. JESUS' NINTH YEAR (A.D. 3)

124:1.1 Though it could hardly be said that Jesus was ever seriously ill, he did have some of the minor ailments of childhood this year, along with his brothers and baby sister.

124:1.2 School went on and he was still a favored pupil, having one week each month at liberty, and he continued to divide his time about equally between trips to neighboring cities with his father, sojourns on his uncle's farm south of Nazareth, and fishing excursions out from Magdala.

124:1.3 The most serious trouble as yet to come up at school occurred in late winter when Jesus dared to challenge the chazan regarding the teaching that all images, pictures, and drawings were idolatrous in nature. Jesus delighted in drawing landscapes as well as in modeling a great variety of objects in potter's clay.

[Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth (Ex. 20:4).]

Everything of that sort was strictly forbidden by Jewish law, but up to this time he had managed to disarm his parents' objection to such an extent that they had permitted him to continue in these activities.

124:1.4 But trouble was again stirred up at school when one of the more backward pupils discovered Jesus drawing a charcoal picture of the teacher on the floor of the schoolroom. There it was, plain as day, and many of the elders had viewed it before the committee went to call on Joseph to demand that something be done to suppress the lawlessness of his eldest son. And though this was not the first time complaints had come to Joseph and Mary about the doings of their versatile and aggressive child, this was the most serious of all the accusations which had thus far been lodged against him. Jesus listened to the indictment of his artistic efforts for some time, being seated on a large stone just outside the back door. He resented their blaming his father for his alleged misdeeds; so in he marched, fearlessly confronting his accusers.

The elders were thrown into confusion. Some were inclined to view the episode humorously, while one or two seemed to think the boy was sacrilegious if not blasphemous. Joseph was nonplused, Mary indignant, but Jesus insisted on being heard. He had his say, courageously defended his viewpoint, and with consummate self-control announced that he would abide by the decision of his father in this as in all other matters controversial. And the committee of elders departed in silence.

124:1.5 Mary endeavored to influence Joseph to permit Jesus to model in clay at home, provided he promised not to carry on any of these questionable activities at school, but Joseph felt impelled to rule that the rabbinical interpretation of the second commandment should prevail. And so Jesus no more drew or modeled the likeness of anything from that day as long as he lived in his father's house. But he was unconvinced of the wrong of what he had done, and to give up such a favorite pastime constituted one of the great trials of his young life.

I: THE LAND WHERE JESUS LIVED
(Barton 3)

Two and a half hours' walk to the east of Nazareth rises Mount Tabor... From its top an extensive and beautiful view is visible ... We do not know whether Jesus ever climbed to the top and saw the view or not. One would like to believe that he did! (B 10)

124:1.6 In the latter part of June, Jesus, in company with his father, first climbed to the summit of Mount Tabor.

It was a clear day and the view was superb. It seemed to this nine-year-old lad that he had really gazed upon the entire world excepting India, Africa, and Rome.

124:1.7 Jesus' second sister, Martha, was born Thursday night, September 13. Three weeks after the coming of Martha, Joseph, who was home for awhile, started the building of an addition to their house, a combined workshop and bedroom. A small workbench was built for Jesus, and for the first time he possessed tools of his own. At odd times for many years he worked at this bench and became highly expert in the making of yokes.

124:1.8 This winter and the next were the coldest in Nazareth for many decades.

[SNOW.—Every winter snow falls occasionally in the mountainous districts of Palestine

Jesus had seen snow on the mountains, and several times it had fallen in Nazareth, but seldom lies for more than a few hours—at most a day or two (Hastings' DB 867).]

remaining on the ground only a short time;

but not until this winter had he seen ice.

The fact that water could be had as a solid, a liquid, and a vapor—he had long pondered over the escaping steam from the boiling pots—caused the lad to think a great deal about the physical world and its constitution; and yet the personality embodied in this growing youth was all this while the actual creator and organizer of all these things throughout a far-flung universe.

PALESTINA and PALESTINE.
(Smith's DB 2284)

THE CLIMATE. (Smith's DB 2317)

The results of these observations at Jerusalem may be stated generally as follows. January is the coldest month, and July and August the hottest, though June and September are nearly as warm.

In the first-named month the temperature averaged 49.1° Fahr., and greatest cold 28°;

in July and August the average is 78.4°; with greatest heat 92° in the shade and 143° in the sun (SDB 2317).

[[S]now-capped Hermon ... with its touch of arctic splendor, [overlooked] the verdant, torrid valley in which the pilgrims were sweltering (Barton 91).]

The heat, though extreme during the four midsummer months, is much alleviated by a sea-breeze from the N. W., which blows with great regularity from 10 A.M. till 10 P.M.—and from this and other unexplained causes, the heat is rarely oppressive, except during the occasional presence of the Khamsin or sirocco, and is said to be much more bearable than even in many parts of the Western world which are deemed tropical.

124:1.9 The climate of Nazareth was not severe.

January was the coldest month, the temperature averaging around 50° F.

During July and August, the hottest months, the temperature would vary from 75° to 90° F.

From the mountains to the Jordan and the Dead Sea valley the climate of Palestine ranged from the frigid to the torrid.

And so, in a way, the Jews were prepared to live in about any and all of the world's varying climates.

124:1.10 Even during the warmest summer months a cool sea breeze usually blew from the west from 10:00 A.M. until about 10:00 P.M.

The Khamsin blows in February, March, and April (Wildenbruch). It is most oppressive when it comes from the east, bearing the heat and sand of the desert with it, and during its continuance darkening the air and filling everything with fine dust (Miss Beaufort, ii. 223) (SDB 2317).

[Practically all the rain in Palestine falls between November and April (Barton 6).]

It is not a heavy, continuous rain, so much as a succession of severe showers or storms with intervening periods of fine bright weather, permitting the grain crops to grow and ripen (SDB 2317).

Between April and November there is, with the rarest exceptions, an uninterrupted succession of fine weather, and skies without a cloud. Thus the year divides itself into two, and only two, seasons—as indeed we see it constantly divided in the Bible—

“winter and summer,” “cold and heat,” “seed-time and harvest” (SDB 2317).

I: THE LAND WHERE JESUS LIVED (Barton 3)

At the end of January wild flowers begin to bloom, and by April the whole land is a continuous flower garden of unimagined beauty (B 6).

But every now and then terrific hot winds from the eastern desert would blow across all Palestine.

These hot blasts usually came in February and March, near the end of the rainy season.

In those days the rain fell in refreshing showers from November to April, but it did not rain steadily.

There were only two seasons in Palestine, summer and winter, the dry and rainy seasons.

In January the flowers began to bloom, and by the end of April the whole land was one vast flower garden.

124:1.11 In May of this year, on his uncle's farm, Jesus for the first time helped with the harvest of the grain. Before he was thirteen, he had managed to find out something about practically everything that men and women worked at around Nazareth except metal working, and he spent several months in a smith's shop when older, after the death of his father.

124:1.12 When work and caravan travel were slack, Jesus made many trips with his father on pleasure or business to near-by Cana, Endor, and Nain. Even as a lad he frequently visited

Only three miles from Nazareth, however, to the northwest was the city of Sepphoris, which from 4 B.C. to 39 A.D.

was the residence of Herod Antipas, the tetrarch of Galilee and Peræa. A boy who lives within three miles of the capital of his country cannot be said to be in the backwoods (B 10).

and from 4 B.C. to about A.D. 25

the capital of Galilee and one of the residences of Herod Antipas.

124:1.13 Jesus continued to grow physically, intellectually, socially, and spiritually. His trips away from home did much to give him a better and more generous understanding of his own family, and by this time even his parents were beginning to learn from him as well as to teach him. Jesus was an original thinker and a skillful teacher, even in his youth.

[?] [See Barton 42-45 re Oral Law.]

He was in constant collision with the so-called “oral law,” but he always sought to adapt himself to the practices of his family.

He got along fairly well with the children of his age, but he often grew discouraged with their slow-acting minds.

Before he was ten years old, he had become the leader of a group of seven lads who formed themselves into a society for promoting the acquirements of manhood—physical, intellectual, and religious.

[He soon forgot the games in the garden and at the fountain, loving the wooden sword which he had made in Joseph’s shop, and mustering his chums into companies, armed like himself. These he drilled and disciplined. On holidays he led them forth into the fields beyond Nazareth, where they repeated the heroic deeds of David and Jonathan against the Philistines...

... He was always a leader, always a patriot (Norwood 37).]

Among these boys Jesus succeeded in introducing many new games and various improved methods of physical recreation.

2. THE TENTH YEAR (A.D. 4)

[All the while He breathed the atmosphere of a devout and loving home; and unacquainted though He was with the secret which Joseph and Mary had hidden in their hearts, gradually there would dawn upon Him a sense of His heavenly origin (Smith 24).]

124:2.1 It was the fifth of July, the first Sabbath of the month, when Jesus, while strolling through the countryside with his father, first gave expression to feelings and ideas which indicated that he was becoming self-conscious of the unusual nature of his life mission.

Joseph listened attentively to the momentous words of his son but made few comments; he volunteered no information. The next day Jesus had a similar but longer talk with his mother. Mary likewise listened to the pronouncements of the lad, but neither did she volunteer any information. It was almost two years before Jesus again spoke to his parents concerning this increasing revelation within his own consciousness regarding the nature of his personality and the character of his mission on earth.

124:2.2 He entered the advanced school of the synagogue in August. At school he was constantly creating trouble by the questions he persisted in asking. Increasingly he kept all Nazareth in more or less of a hubbub. His parents were loath to forbid his asking these disquieting questions, and his chief teacher was greatly intrigued by the lad's curiosity, insight, and hunger for knowledge.

124:2.3 Jesus' playmates saw nothing supernatural in his conduct; in most ways he was altogether like themselves. His interest in study was somewhat above the average but not wholly unusual. He did ask more questions at school than others in his class.

124:2.4 Perhaps his most unusual and outstanding trait was his unwillingness to fight for his rights.

[Jesus did not contend for His rights.... He did not retaliate when roughly used, but bore insult patiently (Mrs. E. G. White, The Desire of Ages [1898], p. 89).]

Since he was such a well-developed lad for his age, it seemed strange to his playfellows that he was disinclined to defend himself even from injustice or when subjected to personal abuse. As it happened, he did not suffer much on account of this trait because of the friendship of Jacob, a neighbor boy, who was one year older. He was the son of the stone mason, a business associate of Joseph. Jacob was a great admirer of Jesus and made it his business to see that no one was permitted to impose upon Jesus because of his aversion to physical combat. Several times older and uncouth youths attacked Jesus, relying upon his reputed docility, but they always suffered swift and certain retribution at the hands of his self-appointed champion and ever-ready defender, Jacob the stone mason's son.

124:2.5 Jesus was the generally accepted leader of the Nazareth lads who stood for the higher ideals of their day and generation. He was really loved by his youthful associates, not only because he was fair, but also because he possessed a rare and understanding sympathy that betokened love and bordered on discreet compassion.

124:2.6 This year he began to show a marked preference for the company of older persons. He delighted in talking over things cultural, educational, social, economic, political, and religious with older minds, and his depth of reasoning and keenness of observation so charmed his adult associates that they were always more than willing to visit with him.

Until he became responsible for the support of the home, his parents were constantly seeking to influence him to associate with those of his own age, or more nearly his age, rather than with older and better- informed individuals for whom he evinced such a preference.

124:2.7 Late this year he had a fishing experience of two months with his uncle on the Sea of Galilee, and he was very successful. Before attaining manhood, he had become an expert fisherman.

124:2.8 His physical development continued; he was an advanced and privileged pupil at school; he got along fairly well at home with his younger brothers and sisters, having the advantage of being three and one-half years older than the oldest of the other children.

IV: SCHOOL DAYS IN NAZARETH
(Norwood 43)

He was well thought of in Nazareth except by

Some thought Jesus a trifle pert (N 46).

the parents of some of the duller children, who often spoke of Jesus as being too pert, as lacking in proper humility and youthful reserve.

He manifested a growing tendency to direct the play activities of his youthful associates into more serious and thoughtful channels. He was a born teacher and simply could not refrain from so functioning, even when supposedly engaged in play.

IX: THE CHILD-LIFE IN NAZARETH.
(Edersheim 217)

The smiling landscape of Lower Galilee invited the easy labour of the agriculturist.... A more beautiful country—hill, dale, and lake—could scarcely be imagined than Galilee Proper.... Corn grew in abundance; the wine, though not so plentiful as the oil, was rich and generous.

Proverbially, all fruit grew in perfection, and altogether the cost of living was about one-fifth that in Judæa.

And then, what a teeming, busy population! Making every allowance for exaggeration, we cannot wholly ignore the account of Josephus about the 240 towns and villages of Galilee, each with not less 15,000 inhabitants. In the centres of industry all then known trades were busily carried on; the husbandman pursued his happy toil on genial soil, while by the Lake of Gennesaret, with its unrivalled beauty, its rich villages, and lovely retreats, the fisherman plied his healthy avocation (E1 224-25).

124:2.9 Joseph early began to instruct Jesus in the diverse means of gaining a livelihood, explaining the advantages of agriculture over industry and trade.

Galilee was a more beautiful and prosperous district than Judea, and it cost only about one fourth as much to live there as in Jerusalem and Judea.

It was a province of agricultural villages and thriving industrial cities, containing more than two hundred towns of over five thousand population and thirty of over fifteen thousand.

124:2.10 When on his first trip with his father to observe the fishing industry on the lake of Galilee, Jesus had just about made up his mind to become a fisherman; but close association with his father's vocation later on influenced him to become a carpenter, [Without either technical equipment or professional experience the relatively unknown artisan of Nazareth undertook the task of religious leadership for all Israel. It must have been a significant combination of circumstances that induced him to make so revolutionary a change in his course of life (Shirley Jackson Case, Jesus: A New Biography [1927], p. 213).

while still later a combination of influences led him to the final choice of becoming a religious teacher of a new order.

3. THE ELEVENTH YEAR (A.D. 5)

124:3.1 Throughout this year the lad continued to make trips away from home with his father, but he also frequently visited his uncle's farm and occasionally went over to Magdala to engage in fishing with the uncle who made his headquarters near that city.

124:3.2 Joseph and Mary were often tempted to show some special favoritism for Jesus or otherwise to betray their knowledge that he was a child of promise, a son of destiny. But both of his parents were extraordinarily wise and sagacious in all these matters. The few times they did in any manner exhibit any preference for him, even in the slightest degree, the lad was quick to refuse all such special consideration.

124:3.3 Jesus spent considerable time at the caravan supply shop, and by conversing with the travelers from all parts of the world, he acquired a store of information about international affairs that was amazing, considering his age. This was the last year in which he enjoyed much free play and youthful joyousness. From this time on difficulties and responsibilities rapidly multiplied in the life of this youth.

124:3.4 On Wednesday evening, June 24, A.D. 5, Jude was born. Complications attended the birth of this, the seventh child. Mary was so very ill for several weeks that Joseph remained at home. Jesus was very much occupied with errands for his father and with many duties occasioned by his mother's serious illness. Never again did this youth find it possible to return to the childlike attitude of his earlier years. From the time of his mother's illness—just before he was eleven years old—he was compelled to assume the responsibilities of the first-born son and to do all this one or two full years before these burdens should normally have fallen on his shoulders.

124:3.5 The chazan spent one evening each week with Jesus, helping him to master the Hebrew scriptures. He was greatly interested in the progress of his promising pupil; therefore was he willing to assist him in many ways. This Jewish pedagogue exerted a great influence upon this growing mind, but he was never able to comprehend why Jesus was so indifferent to all his suggestions regarding the prospects of going to Jerusalem to continue his education under the learned rabbis.

XIII: THE BOY'S VISIT TO THE TEMPLE (Luke 2:41-51.) (Barton 88)

[Scythopolis was the largest city of the Decapolis, and the only one of the ten which lay west of the Jordan (Smith's DB 2875).]

[See 124.6.4, below.]

124:3.6 About the middle of May the lad accompanied his father on a business trip to Scythopolis, the chief Greek city of the Decapolis, the ancient Hebrew city of Beth-shean.

On the way Joseph recounted much of the olden history of

It was the deliverance of this city from the Ammonites that a thousand years before had made Saul king, and to the walls of the same city the Philistines, after the fateful battle of Gilboa, had fastened Saul's body.

King Saul, the Philistines,

About four hundred years later some Scythians who invaded Palestine seem to have settled there, and the city was called Scythopolis from them (B 90).

and the subsequent events of Israel's turbulent history.

Jesus was tremendously impressed with the clean appearance and well-ordered arrangement of this so-called heathen city.

Architecturally these cities were much more beautiful than most of the cities of Palestine. They contained streets flanked on either side with beautiful columns, fine temples, and large outdoor theaters. The traveler may still behold the remains of the theater of Scythopolis (B 90).

He marveled at the open-air theater and admired the beautiful marble temple dedicated to the worship of the "heathen" gods.

Joseph was much perturbed by the lad's enthusiasm and sought to counteract these favorable impressions by extolling the beauty and grandeur of the Jewish temple at Jerusalem.

[See 123:5.12.]

Jesus had often gazed curiously upon this magnificent Greek city from the hill of Nazareth

The pilgrims from Nazareth would not go near this heathen city, for to do so would incur such defilement that they could not eat the Passover, but we may be sure that the boy Jesus asked many questions about it as he saw its marble structures reflecting the rays of the day (B 90).

and had many times inquired about its extensive public works and ornate buildings, but his father had always sought to avoid answering these questions. Now they were face to face with the beauties of this gentile city, and Joseph could not gracefully ignore Jesus' inquiries.

124:3.7 It so happened that just at this time the annual competitive games and public demonstrations of physical prowess between the Greek cities of the Decapolis were in progress at the Scythopolis amphitheater, and Jesus was insistent that his father take him to see the games, and he was so insistent that Joseph hesitated to deny him. The boy was thrilled with the games and entered most heartily into the spirit of the demonstrations of physical development and athletic skill. Joseph was inexpressibly shocked to observe his son's enthusiasm as he beheld these exhibitions of "heathen" vaingloriousness. After the games were finished, Joseph received the surprise of his life when he heard Jesus express his approval of them and suggest that it would be good for the young men of Nazareth if they could be thus benefited by wholesome outdoor physical activities. Joseph talked earnestly and long with Jesus concerning the evil nature of such practices, but he well knew that the lad was unconvinced.

124:3.8 The only time Jesus ever saw his father angry with him was that night in their room at the inn when, in the course of their discussions, the boy so far forgot the trends of Jewish thought as to suggest that they go back home and work for the building of an amphitheater at Nazareth. When Joseph heard his first-born son express such un-Jewish sentiments, he forgot his usual calm demeanor and, seizing Jesus by the shoulder, angrily exclaimed, "My son, never again let me hear you give utterance to such an evil thought as long as you live." Jesus was startled by his father's display of emotion; he had never before been made to feel the personal sting of his father's indignation and was astonished and shocked beyond expression. He only replied, "Very well, my father, it shall be so." And never again did the boy even in the slightest manner allude to the games and other athletic activities of the Greeks as long as his father lived.

[[One of the corrupt High-Priests, before the Maccabean rule, built a Hippodrome and a Gymnasium for heathen games in Jerusalem.] It was probably this which Herod afterwards enlarged and beautified, and turned into a theatre. No expense was spared on the great games held there.... But to the Jews this essentially heathen place, over against their Temple, was cause of deep indignation and plots. Besides this theatre, Herod also built an immense amphitheatre, which we must locate somewhere in the north-west, and outside the second city wall. (Edersheim 118).]

124:3.9 Later on, Jesus saw the Greek amphitheater at Jerusalem and learned how hateful such things were from the Jewish point of view.

Nevertheless, throughout his life he endeavored to introduce the idea of wholesome recreation into his personal plans and, as far as Jewish practice would permit, into the later program of regular activities for his twelve apostles.

124:3.10 At the end of this eleventh year Jesus was a vigorous, well-developed, moderately humorous, and fairly lighthearted youth, but from this year on he was more and more given to peculiar seasons of profound meditation and serious contemplation. He was much given to thinking about how he was to carry out his obligations to his family and at the same time be obedient to the call of his mission to the world; already he had conceived that his ministry was not to be limited to the betterment of the Jewish people.

4. THE TWELFTH YEAR (A.D. 6)

124:4.1 This was an eventful year in Jesus' life. He continued to make progress at school and was indefatigable in his study of nature, while increasingly he prosecuted his study of the methods whereby men make a living. He began doing regular work in the home carpenter shop and was permitted to manage his own earnings, a very unusual arrangement to obtain in a Jewish family. This year he also learned the wisdom of keeping such matters a secret in the family. He was becoming conscious of the way in which he had caused trouble in the village, and henceforth he became increasingly discreet in concealing everything which might cause him to be regarded as different from his fellows.

124:4.2 Throughout this year he experienced many seasons of uncertainty, if not actual doubt, regarding the nature of his mission. His naturally developing human mind did not yet fully grasp the reality of his dual nature. The fact that he had a single personality rendered it difficult for his consciousness to recognize the double origin of those factors which composed the nature associated with that selfsame personality.

124:4.3 From this time on he became more successful in getting along with his brothers and sisters. He was increasingly tactful, always compassionate and considerate of their welfare and happiness, and enjoyed good relations with them up to the beginning of his public ministry. To be more explicit: He got along with James, Miriam, and the two younger (as yet unborn) children, Amos and Ruth, most excellently. He always got along with Martha fairly well. What trouble he had at home largely arose out of friction with Joseph and Jude, particularly the latter.

124:4.4 It was a trying experience for Joseph and Mary to undertake the rearing of this unprecedented combination of divinity and humanity, and they deserve great credit for so faithfully and successfully discharging their parental responsibilities. Increasingly Jesus' parents realized that there was something superhuman resident within this eldest son, but they never even faintly dreamed that this son of promise was indeed and in truth the actual creator of this local universe of things and beings. Joseph and Mary lived and died without ever learning that their son Jesus really was the Universe Creator incarnate in mortal flesh.

124:4.5 This year Jesus paid more attention than ever to music, and he continued to teach the home school for his brothers and sisters. It was at about this time that the lad became keenly conscious of the difference between the viewpoints of Joseph and Mary regarding the nature of his mission. He pondered much over his parents' differing opinions, often hearing their discussions when they thought he was sound asleep. More and more he inclined to the view of his father, so that his mother was destined to be hurt by the realization that her son was gradually rejecting her guidance in matters having to do with his life career. And, as the years passed, this breach of understanding widened. Less and less did Mary comprehend the significance of Jesus' mission, and increasingly was this good mother hurt by the failure of her favorite son to fulfill her fond expectations.

124:4.6 Joseph entertained a growing belief in the spiritual nature of Jesus' mission. And but for other and more important reasons it does seem unfortunate that he could not have lived to see the fulfillment of his concept of Jesus' bestowal on earth.

I, IX: THE CHILD-LIFE IN NAZARETH.
(Edersheim 217)

Even before he could follow [his mother] in such religious household duties, his eyes must have been attracted by the Mezuzah attached to the doorpost, as the name of the Most High on the outside of the little folded parchment was reverently touched by each who came and went, and then the fingers kissed that had come in contact with the Holy Name (E1 228).

In popular opinion it was the symbol of the Divine guard over Israel's homes, the visible emblem of this joyous hymn: 'The Lord shall preserve thy going out and coming in, from this time forth, and even for evermore' (E1 228).

124:4.7 During his last year at school, when he was twelve years old, Jesus remonstrated with his father about the Jewish custom of touching the bit of parchment nailed upon the doorpost each time on going into, or coming out of, the house and then kissing the finger that touched the parchment.

As a part of this ritual it was customary to say,

"The Lord shall preserve our going out and our coming in, from this time forth and even forevermore."

Joseph and Mary had repeatedly instructed Jesus as to the reasons for not making images or drawing pictures, explaining that such creations might be used for idolatrous purposes. Though Jesus failed fully to grasp their proscriptions against images and pictures, he possessed a high concept of consistency and therefore pointed out to his father the essentially idolatrous nature of this habitual obeisance to the doorpost parchment. And Joseph removed the parchment after Jesus had thus remonstrated with him.

124:4.8 As time passed, Jesus did much to modify their practice of religious forms, such as the family prayers and other customs. And it was possible to do many such things at Nazareth, for its synagogue was under the influence of a liberal school of rabbis, exemplified by

The great ideal teacher of Palestinian schools was Akiba, and one of his most outspoken opponents a Galilean, Rabbi José. In religious observances [the Galileans'] practice was simpler; as regarded canon-law they often took independent views, and generally followed the interpretations of those who, in opposition to Akiba, inclined to the more mild and rational—we had almost said, the more human—application of traditionalism (E1 225).

the renowned Nazareth teacher, Jose.

124:4.9 Throughout this and the two following years Jesus suffered great mental distress as the result of his constant effort to adjust his personal views of religious practices and social amenities to the established beliefs of his parents. He was distraught by the conflict between the urge to be loyal to his own convictions and the conscientious admonition of dutiful submission to his parents; his supreme conflict was between two great commands which were uppermost in his youthful mind. The one was: "Be loyal to the dictates of your highest convictions of truth and righteousness." The other was: "Honor your father and mother, for they have given you life and the nurture thereof."

However, he never shirked the responsibility of making the necessary daily adjustments between these realms of loyalty to one's personal convictions and duty toward one's family, and he achieved the satisfaction of effecting an increasingly harmonious blending of personal convictions and family obligations into a masterful concept of group solidarity based upon loyalty, fairness, tolerance, and love.

5. HIS THIRTEENTH YEAR (A.D. 7)

124:5.1 In this year the lad of Nazareth passed from boyhood to the beginning of young manhood; his voice began to change, and other features of mind and body gave evidence of the oncoming status of manhood.

124:5.2 On Sunday night, January 9, A.D. 7, his baby brother, Amos, was born. Jude was not yet two years of age, and the baby sister, Ruth, was yet to come; so it may be seen that Jesus had a sizable family of small children left to his watchcare when his father met his accidental death the following year.

124:5.3 It was about the middle of February that Jesus became humanly assured that he was destined to perform a mission on earth for the enlightenment of man and the revelation of God. Momentous decisions, coupled with far-reaching plans, were formulating in the mind of this youth, who was, to outward appearances, an average Jewish lad of Nazareth.

The intelligent life of all Nebadon looked on with fascination and amazement as all this began to unfold in the thinking and acting of the now adolescent carpenter's son.

124:5.4 On the first day of the week, March 20, A.D. 7, Jesus graduated from the course of training in the local school connected with the Nazareth synagogue. This was a great day in the life of any ambitious Jewish family, the day when the first-born son was pronounced a “son of the commandment” and the ransomed first-born of the Lord God of Israel, a “child of the Most High” and servant of the Lord of all the earth.

[[Herod] rebuilt the city of Sepphoris, an important center in Galilee. Perhaps Joseph, possibly Jesus himself, worked on this reconstruction (Benjamin Willard Robinson, Ph.D., The Sayings of Jesus [1930], p. 62).]

124:5.5 Friday of the week before, Joseph had come over from Sepphoris, where he was in charge of the work on a new public building, to be present on this glad occasion.

Jesus' teacher confidently believed that his alert and diligent pupil was destined to some outstanding career, some distinguished mission.

[But many were for Jesus—proud of him, and sharing with Nahor the hope that one day the Sanhedrin would number him of their company (Norwood 47).]

The elders, notwithstanding all their trouble with Jesus' nonconformist tendencies, were very proud of the lad and had already begun laying plans which would enable him to go to Jerusalem to continue his education in [The Temple called thousands of priests, many of them with their families, to Jerusalem; while the learned Academies were filled with hundreds, though it may have been mostly poor, students and scholars (Edersheim 1 117).] [See also 123:5.3.]

the renowned Hebrew academies.

124:5.6 As Jesus heard these plans discussed from time to time, he became increasingly sure that he would never go to Jerusalem to study with the rabbis. But he little dreamed of the tragedy, so soon to occur, which would insure the abandonment of all such plans by causing him to assume the responsibility for the support and direction of a large family, presently to consist of five brothers and three sisters as well as his mother and himself. Jesus had a larger and longer experience rearing this family than was accorded to Joseph, his father; and he did measure up to the standard which he subsequently set for himself: to become a wise, patient, understanding, and effective teacher and eldest brother to this family—his family—so suddenly sorrow-stricken and so unexpectedly bereaved.

6. THE JOURNEY TO JERUSALEM

124:6.1 Jesus, having now reached the threshold of young manhood and having been formally graduated from the synagogue schools, was qualified to proceed to Jerusalem with his parents to participate with them in the celebration of his first Passover. The Passover feast of this year fell on Saturday, April 9, A.D. 7.

XIII: THE BOY'S VISIT TO THE TEMPLE (Luke 2:41-51) (Barton 88)

A considerable company (103) made ready to depart from Nazareth early Monday morning, April 4, for Jerusalem.

The company of pilgrims from Nazareth wound its way from the little basin in which Nazareth lies out into the Plain of Esdrælon and at first journeyed southward, passing the village of Nain on the high land at their left.

It then turned southeastward, because just across the Plain of Esdrælon on the south lay the country of Samaria, inhabited by a people who were heretics (B 89).

X: CHRIST THE QUESTION (Wilson 72)

[contd] When Jesus was a boy of twelve years old, He did not seem to have one enemy in the whole wide world. Herod was dead; Archelaus had been deposed; Joseph's sleep was untroubled by dreams; and no one appeared to associate the growing lad with the Babe of Bethlehem, who vanished into obscurity with the old King's final massacre (W 72).

They journeyed south toward Samaria,

but on reaching Jezreel,

they turned east,

going around Mount Gilboa into the Jordan valley in order to avoid passing through Samaria.

Joseph and his family would have enjoyed going down through Samaria by way of Jacob's well and Bethel, but since the Jews disliked to deal with the Samaritans, they decided to go with their neighbors by way of the Jordan valley.

124:6.2 The much-dreaded Archelaus had been deposed, and they had little to fear in taking Jesus to Jerusalem.

Twelve years had passed since the first Herod had sought to destroy the babe of Bethlehem, and no one would now think of associating that affair with this obscure lad of Nazareth.

XIII: THE BOY'S VISIT TO THE TEMPLE (Luke 2:41-51) (Barton 88)

Soon after turning southeastward they passed at some distance on their left hand the village of Shunem, where the most beautiful girl in all Israel had once been found (see I Kings 1:3,4), and where at a later time there lived some friends of the prophet Elisha, whose son Elisha is said to have raised from the dead (II Kings 4).

Farther on they passed to the north of the city of Jezeel, once the residence of Ahab and Jezebel and later the scene of Jehu's bloody victory over the last of Ahab's house.

Soon the mountains of Gilboa, which witnessed the defeat of King Saul and his death at the hands of the Philistines, rose high on their right hand.

Rounding the base of Gilboa, the pilgrims could see at a distance to the left the city of Scythopolis, the Bethshean of the Old Testament (B 89-90).

124:6.3 Before reaching the Jezreel junction, and as they journeyed on, very soon, on the left, they passed the ancient village of Shunem, and Jesus heard again about the most beautiful maiden of all Israel who once lived there and also about the wonderful works Elisha performed there.

In passing by Jezeel,

Jesus' parents recounted the doings of Ahab and Jezebel and the exploits of Jehu.

In passing around Mount Gilboa, they talked much about

Saul, who took his life on the slopes of this mountain,

King David, and the associations of this historic spot.

124:6.4 As they rounded the base of Gilboa, the pilgrims could see the Greek city of Scythopolis on the right.

The pilgrims from Nazareth would not go near this heathen city, for to do so would incur such defilement that they could not eat the Passover, but we may be sure that the boy Jesus asked many questions about it as he saw its marble structures reflecting the rays of the sun (B 90).

[See 124:3.6-8, above.]

[contd] From the base of Gilboa the little band went southward down the valley of the Jordan.

High on their right rose the hills of Samaria; below them on the left the silver thread of the river Jordan—which is so crooked that it runs two hundred miles which a straight line would cover in sixty—could be seen winding in and out (B 90-91).

They gazed upon the marble structures from a distance

but went not near the gentile city lest they so defile themselves that they could not participate in the forthcoming solemn and sacred ceremonies of the Passover at Jerusalem.

Mary could not understand why neither Joseph nor Jesus would speak of Scythopolis.

She did not know about their controversy of the previous year as they had never revealed this episode to her.

124:6.5 The road now led immediately down into the tropical Jordan valley, and soon Jesus was to have exposed to his wondering gaze

the crooked and ever-winding Jordan with its glistening and rippling waters as it flowed down toward the Dead Sea.

When the party left Nazareth in the early spring morning the air had been cold; in the Jordan valley it was uncomfortably hot. Outer garments were laid aside, and probably the animated conversations that had cheered the morning gave way to silence as in the heat the pilgrims, overtaken by weariness, plodded on.

As the company traveled southward in the tropical valley, where luxuriant fields of grain surrounded them and tall, tropical oleanders, laden with pink blooms, adorned the landscape, they could see, whenever they looked behind them, snow-capped Hermon, far to the north, raising its head and overlooking like a sentinel, with its touch of arctic splendor, the verdant, torrid valley in which the pilgrims were sweltering (B 91).

[contd] Three hours after leaving Scythopolis the party came to a copious spring. It is to-day called by an Arabic name which means the white or silent spring.

It was probably here that the travelers halted for their first night.

As they bivouacked under the open sky, the brilliant Palestinian stars looked down upon them. As the youthful Jesus looked up at the stars, he thought of the Heavenly Father who had made them and to whose house he was going (B 91).

[contd] On the second day's march the pilgrims passed the point where the Jabbok, flowing from the east, empties into the Jordan.

They laid aside their outer garments

as they journeyed south in this tropical valley, enjoying the luxurious fields of grain and the beautiful oleanders laden with their pink blossoms, while massive snow-capped Mount Hermon stood far to the north, in majesty looking down on the historic valley.

A little over three hours' travel from opposite Scythopolis they came upon a bubbling spring, and here they camped for the night, out under the starlit heavens.

124:6.6 On their second day's journey they passed by where the Jabbok, from the east, flows into the Jordan,

Looking across the river they could see the deep notch in the hills out of which the Jabbok flowed.

Perhaps they thought of the hordes of Midianites who, in the days of Gideon, had poured down this valley to invade and devour their land (B 91).

Toward night of the second day from Nazareth they passed the highest mountain that overlooks the Jordan valley on the west, the top of which rises 2,227 feet above the floor of the valley.

It seems to have been crowned at that time by a fortress built about ninety years before by Alexander Jannæus and called the Alexandreion—a fortress that had been the scene of some dark domestic tragedies in the family life of Herod the Great. Here Herod had imprisoned his wife, Mariamne, and here he had buried his two strangled sons (B 92).

[contd] During the journey of the third day the little company passed two other places of note, Phasaelis and Archelais.

The former had been built by Herod the Great and named for his brother, the latter by Archelaus and named for himself.

Both were surrounded by famous palm-orchards, and their architecture, in contrast to the rough Jewish buildings of the time, was strikingly attractive.

and looking east up this river valley, they recounted the days of Gideon, when the Midianites poured into this region to overrun the land.

Toward the end of the second day's journey

they camped near the base of the highest mountain overlooking the Jordan valley,

Mount Sartaba,

whose summit was occupied by the Alexandrian fortress where Herod had imprisoned one of his wives and buried his two strangled sons.

124:6.7 The third day they passed by two villages which had been recently built by Herod and noted their superior architecture and their beautiful palm gardens.

Probably the third night of the journey was spent at Jericho—a place famed in Jewish story for Joshua's capture of the city.

By nightfall they reached Jericho, where they remained until the morrow.

The Jericho of the time of Christ was, however, a mile and a half from the spot on which the city captured by Joshua stood (B 92).

That evening Joseph, Mary, and Jesus walked a mile and a half to the site of the ancient Jericho, where Joshua, for whom Jesus was named, had performed his renowned exploits, according to Jewish tradition.

124:6.8 By the fourth and last day's journey the road was a continuous procession of pilgrims.

On the fourth day the little caravan, perhaps by this time joined by other companies of Jews from the Jordan valley and Peræa, began the ascent of the Judæan hills toward Jerusalem.

They now began to climb the hills leading up to Jerusalem.

As they climbed these hills and the boy Jesus looked back, the Jordan valley, here at its widest extent, was spread out before him.

As they neared the top, they could look across the Jordan

Across its twenty miles of plain rose the rugged outline of the trans-Jordanic mountains, on which of old the tribes of Gad and Reuben had dwelt.

to the mountains beyond

At the south end of the broad valley appeared the crystal waters of the Dead Sea, reflecting the brilliant rays of the morning sun, its sluggish ripples seeming to wash the base of the distant mountains of Moab (B 92-93).

and south over the sluggish waters of the Dead Sea.

Westward and upward the cavalcade proceeded, over rocky and barren hills, strewn with stones and flint. When about half way up to Jerusalem, as the party passed over a ridge, the top of the Mount of Olives became visible far above them to the west.

Probably Joseph or Mary pointed out to Jesus that just behind the peak of that mountain lay the Sacred City.

His heart would beat faster as he pressed eagerly forward, little thinking, perhaps, how in subsequent centuries men of many races would look with reverential interest upon that mountain because of its sacred associations with him (B 93-94).

[contd] As the company reached the eastern slope of Olivet it came to the village of Bethany, the home of a certain Simon, who had three children of about the same age as Jesus: Mary, Martha, and Lazarus.

About halfway up to Jerusalem,

Jesus gained his first view of the Mount of Olives

(the region to be so much a part of his subsequent life), and Joseph pointed out to him that the Holy City lay just beyond this ridge, and the lad's heart beat fast with joyous anticipation of soon beholding the city and house of his heavenly Father.

124:6.9 On the eastern slopes of Olivet they paused for rest in the borders of a little village called Bethany.

The hospitable villagers poured forth to minister to the pilgrims, and it happened that Joseph and his family had stopped near the house of one Simon, who had three children about the same age as Jesus—Mary, Martha, and Lazarus.

In later life these three were special friends of Jesus. One wonders whether Simon may not have been a friend of Joseph, whether the family of Nazareth did not, during the Feast, lodge here as Jesus did during a similar Feast years later, and whether the friendship that meant so much to him during his weary ministry did not begin now (B 94).

Perhaps the family pressed on over Olivet that very night to the city itself.

Even if the family stopped for the night at Bethany, we may be sure that Jesus went before nightfall up to the top of the Mount of Olives to get a glimpse of the city about which so many associations clustered (B 94).

In the time of Christ, when the Temple of Herod was still in full possession of its original splendor, when just west of it and above it rose the old palace of the Asmonæan princes, and farther to the west rose the massive palace of Herod with its towers and extensive gardens, [Jerusalem] must have been much more impressive than it is now. If the Jerusalem of to-day, as one thus comes upon it from the east, even if it has been seen before, awakens strange emotions in the breast of a traveler who has beheld the great cities of the world, what must have been the feelings with which the Boy of Nazareth beheld it for the first time—the Boy who regarded it as the dwelling place of his Heavenly Father! (B 94-95)

They invited the Nazareth family in for refreshment, and a lifelong friendship sprang up between the two families.

Many times afterward, in his eventful life, Jesus stopped in this home.

124:6.10 They pressed on, soon standing on the brink of Olivet, and Jesus saw for the first time (in his memory) the Holy City, the pretentious palaces, and the inspiring temple of his Father.

At no time in his life did Jesus ever experience such a purely human thrill as that which at this time so completely enthralled him as he stood there on this April afternoon on the Mount of Olives, drinking in his first view of Jerusalem. And in after years, on this same spot he stood and wept over the city which was about to reject another prophet, the last and the greatest of her heavenly teachers.

124:6.11 But they hurried on to Jerusalem. It was now Thursday afternoon. On reaching the city, they journeyed past the temple, and never had Jesus beheld such throngs of human beings. He meditated deeply on how these Jews had assembled here from the uttermost parts of the known world.

124:6.12 Soon they reached the place prearranged for their accommodation during the Passover week, the large home of a well-to-do relative of Mary's, one who knew something of the early history of both John and Jesus, through Zacharias. The following day, the day of preparation, they made ready for the appropriate celebration of the Passover Sabbath.

124:6.13 While all Jerusalem was astir in preparation for the Passover, Joseph found time to take his son around to visit the academy where it had been arranged for him to resume his education two years later, as soon as he reached the required age of fifteen. Joseph was truly puzzled when he observed how little interest Jesus evinced in all these carefully laid plans.

124:6.14 Jesus was profoundly impressed by the temple and all the associated services and other activities. For the first time since he was four years old, he was too much preoccupied with his own meditations to ask many questions. He did, however, ask his father several embarrassing questions (as he had on previous occasions) as to why the heavenly Father required the slaughter of so many innocent and helpless animals. And his father well knew from the expression on the lad's face that his answers and attempts at explanation were unsatisfactory to his deep-thinking and keen-reasoning son.

124:6.15 On the day before the Passover Sabbath, flood tides of spiritual illumination swept through the mortal mind of Jesus and filled his human heart to overflowing with affectionate pity for the spiritually blind and morally ignorant multitudes assembled for the celebration of the ancient Passover commemoration. This was one of the most extraordinary days that the Son of God spent in the flesh; and during the night, for the first time in his earth career, there appeared to him an assigned messenger from Salvington, commissioned by Immanuel, who said: "The hour has come. It is time that you began to be about your Father's business."

124:6.16 And so, even ere the heavy responsibilities of the Nazareth family descended upon his youthful shoulders, there now arrived the celestial messenger to remind this lad, not quite thirteen years of age, that the hour had come to begin the resumption of the responsibilities of a universe. This was the first act of a long succession of events which finally culminated in the completion of the Son's bestowal on Urantia and the replacing of

124:6.17 As time passed, the mystery of the incarnation became, to all of us, more and more unfathomable. We could hardly comprehend that this lad of Nazareth was the creator of all Neadon. Neither do we nowadays understand how the spirit of this same Creator Son and the spirit of his Paradise Father are associated with the souls of mankind.

With the passing of time, we could see that his human mind was increasingly discerning that, while he lived his life in the flesh, in spirit on his shoulders rested the responsibility of a universe.

124:6.18 Thus ends the career of the Nazareth lad, and begins the narrative of that adolescent youth—the increasingly self-conscious divine human—who now begins the contemplation of his world career as he strives to integrate his expanding life purpose with the desires of his parents and his obligations to his family and the society of his day and age.
